Gale's Impact Live Virtual Event

Gale is proud to present Impact Live, a virtual event for public libraries. Like you, Gale is driven by connection, inspiration, and creating tangible change across libraries and communities. Join them for a free, two-day event, where you'll hear from compelling speakers, enjoy entertaining breaks, and connect with your peers.

Sessions include Keynotes from the coauthors of "Rapid Change in Libraries: A User Experience Approach" and the cohosts of the podcast, "Truth B Told: Conversations About Culture and Power." Sessions include everything from "More Than a Diversity Audit: Shifting Mindsets about Creating Inclusive Collections" and "Buckle Up! Next Stop, the How-to's of Bookmobile Outreach Services" to "Truth and Reconciliation: A Journey of Developing Indigenous Library Services" and "Data Drives Decisions: How Your Small Library Fits into the Big Picture." Take a look at the agenda to see if there is something that piques your interest, and register on Gale's website to attend this excellent continuing education opportunity.

Highlighting State Government Agencies: Local Foods

Now that Fall is around the corner and the harvests are coming in from the garden, it is a great time to hit your local markets. If you have patrons inquiring where the local farmers' markets are, I have a great source for you! The Business, Marketing, and Information Division of the Department of Agriculture promotes local foods to citizens who both prefer to eat homegrown food and those who grow market gardens. The Local Foods program promotes food grown, produced, or processed in our own communities.

The Local Foods program connects the producer to the consumer directly, creating opportunities to support local agriculture and build community. Their website provides a Farmers' Markets Guide, an Online Local Food Directory Map, Farm to School information, and a lot more. Whether you or your patrons are looking for a Community Supported Agriculture (CSA) Farm to Table, Farmers' Market, or community gardens and orchards, check out the Local Foods program website at <https://www.nd.gov/ndda/business-marketing-information-division/local-foods>.

WordPress Help - Adding a .pdf to Your Website

This month, we're going to discuss two ways to add a .pdf to your library's WordPress website.

1. PDF as a link

To add a link that will take people to your .pdf, click on the location in your post/page where you would like the link, and then click on the plus sign in the upper left-hand corner. You can either select "File" under Media or type pdf in the search and click on "File." If the file has already been uploaded to WordPress, you can click on Media Library, select the file, and click Insert. If not, click on Upload, find the file, and click open. Although it may look like it has been embedded, it will only show up as a link with a Download button next to it. You can get rid of the download button by clicking next to the "Show download button" on the right-hand side.

2. Embedded PDF

If you would like any additional information or need any assistance with your WordPress website, contact BreAnne at ndsipa@nd.gov or 701-328-4656.
