

NewsLitCamp: Misinformation, Disinformation, and Qualities of Journalism

Last week, I attended the webinar “NewsLitCamp: Misinformation” sponsored by the News Literacy Project. This all-day event covered topics such as types of misinformation and disinformation, teaching resources, standards of journalism, curating resources, the point-of-view of teenagers concerning false information, navigating extremism and hate speech, and teaching students how to be excellent fact-checkers. Since this event covered a great deal of topics, I will discuss them over the course of the next few weeks. For week twelve of Tammy’s Teaching Tidbit, I want to talk about false information categories and criteria for quality journalism.

Both misinformation and disinformation involve data that is false; however, the intent of this falsification differs.

Misinformation is created without any intent to manipulate nor be malicious. Oftentimes, misinformation is created to bring humor to a topic. Many memes fall under misinformation; satire also falls under this umbrella. That is not to say that all misinformation pokes fun at a topic. Medical inaccuracies typically fall under misinformation. They are not spread with the goal of causing harm; however, they are also not backed by actual scientific evidence.

LEARN ON YOUR OWN TIME

Universal
Class

Over 500 Online Courses
—including continuing education classes

Online Library Resource Guide

Universal Class

Universal Class provides North Dakota Public Library and State Library cardholders an opportunity to learn skills and hobbies through free online continuing education courses. With over 500 courses in 30 areas of study, this resource has something for everyone. The areas of study include career training, crafts and hobbies, homeschooling, do-it-yourself, personal development, office skills, special education, teacher resources, test preparation, and web development.

These online courses can be completed at your own pace, and many of them have an audit option, which allows you to attend the class without having to take the tests or complete the assignments. If you choose the audit option, you will not get the continuing education credit(s) or the certificate at the end.

Universal Class can be accessed at <https://northdakotastatend.universalclass.com/>.

For more information about Universal Class, contact the State Library at statelib@nd.gov or 701-328-4622.
