

When I am about 6-months-old, I will probably be ready to try infant cereal. I need to be able to do most of these things before you start feeding me cereal:

- Sit up with some support.
- Hold my head up.
- Put my fingers or toys in my mouth.
- Show I want food by opening my mouth.
- Close my lips over the spoon.
- Show I don't want food by turning my head away.
- Keep food in my mouth and swallow it.

When I'm ready, try feeding me a little bit of infant cereal.

You can start with rice cereal. Mix 1 tablespoon of cereal with breast milk or formula – make it thin at first. I may eat only a few bites. When I get better at eating it, you can make it thicker. After a week, I can try oatmeal cereal.

Feed me with a baby spoon. Cereal in my bottle can make me choke or gain too much weight – and I need to learn to use a spoon.

Pick a time to feed me when I am happy and interested, like between breast or bottle feedings.

I need to sit up to eat.

Hold the spoon near my mouth and wait for me to look at it. Then, put a little bit on my lips so I can taste it.

Wait until I open my mouth before you try to put food in.

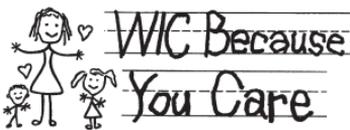

Wait until I am ready for each bite. When I turn my head away, that means I am done. Don't try to get me to eat more.

Be patient while I am learning to eat.

If I won't eat baby cereal, wait a week and try again. I will do better when I am ready. Once I start eating, I will be messy and will want to grab the spoon. Sometimes I will want to hold my own spoon while you feed me.

Adapted from the California WIC Program.

North Dakota WIC Nutrition Program
North Dakota Department of Health
600 E. Boulevard Ave.
Bismarck, ND 58505-0200
800.472.2286

